Jesco Trainingen

4 worksheets

Worksheets for managers

Practical worksheets for working with AI in a smart and sustainable way.

contents

01 Conversation opener: talking about AI work with your team
Discuss AI work and workload with your team without it feeling like criticism.

02 Running a one-hour team session
Step by step from friction point to one to three agreements the team owns itself.

03 Team agreements template for AI work
Record in six topics how your team works with AI, and who looks after what.

04 Six-week review form
For each agreement, decide: keep, adjust or stop. In fifteen minutes.

How to use these worksheets. Each worksheet has two parts: first the explanation with the method and an example, then a page to fill in yourself. Print the fill-in page as often as you like.

For use within your own organisation. Do not resell or share publicly.

Worksheet 01

Conversation opener: talking about AI work with your team

A conversation about workload can feel like a judgement. The aim of this conversation is the opposite: to look together at what makes AI work heavy, and what you can do about it.

Time	When	What you get
15 minutes to prepare, 30 minutes of conversation	When you notice AI work is causing friction, or within two weeks of the team scan	A team that feels heard, and a date for the team session

Why it works

Teams where people feel safe to name problems and mistakes learn more and solve problems sooner.

How you open the conversation decides whether it feels like an assessment or an invitation. By starting with your own experience and putting the work, not people, at the centre, you make it safe to be honest.

Preparation

- Take the team scan at jescotrainingen.nl beforehand, or note three things that strike you about how the team works with AI. Pick the friction point that stands out most to you.
- Think of an example of AI work you find heavy yourself. That makes it safe for others.
- Plan 30 minutes with no other agenda items, ideally not on a Monday morning or Friday afternoon.
- Pencil in an option for the team session in the calendar, within three weeks.

The conversation in four steps

5 min	Opening Explain why you're raising this and what you'll do with the outcome. Stress that it's about the work, not about people.
10 min	First reactions Share the result of the team scan or your own observations. Ask: what do you recognise, and what surprises you?
10 min	Going deeper Choose together the friction point that matters most. Ask for concrete examples from the past few weeks.
5 min	Next steps Agree a date for the team session, where you'll make agreements together.

If someone says...

Reaction from the team	What you can say
Is this about me?	No. It's about how we organise the work, not about who is doing well or badly.
This won't change anything.	That's why we'll pick one thing to tackle together, and check in six weeks whether it's working.
It's not that bad, is it?	For some of us, maybe not. I mainly want to know where it's heavy for others.
Silence.	Take a minute to write down for yourself what you recognise. Then we'll go round the table.

Based on: Edmondson (1999) on psychological safety in teams

Worksheet 01 · To fill in

Conversation opener: talking about AI work with your team

Name

Date

Reaction from the team	What you can say

Phrases that help, and pitfalls to avoid

Reactions from the team, with what you can say

Notes: what the team recognised, the chosen friction point and the date of the team session

For use within your own organisation. Do not resell or share publicly.

Worksheet 02

Running a one-hour team session

The aim of this session: one to three concrete agreements about AI work that the team has come up with itself. Invite everyone, plan an hour and find a room without screens.

Time	You need	What you get
60 minutes, with 4 to 12 participants	Sticky notes, markers, a flip chart or whiteboard, and the team scan result if you have one	One to three agreements the team owns itself

Why it works

Work pressure builds up where the demands of the job outweigh the resources you have. Agreements about AI work lower those demands or increase those resources.

Changes also work better when employees help shape the solution: they know best where things pinch.

How it runs

0:00	Opening The aim of the session, and the ground rule: we discuss the work, not each other.
0:05	Recognition Everyone writes down when AI work felt heavy in the past week, one example per sticky note. Then a round past everyone.
0:20	Choosing Group the sticky notes on the board and choose one friction point to tackle together. Unsure? Everyone gets two dots to vote.
0:30	Coming up with agreements In pairs, think of an agreement that could start next week. Discuss them and pick one to three.
0:50	Writing it down Put the agreements on the team agreements template, choose who looks after each one and schedule the review in six weeks.

Tips for the facilitator

Let silences happen
After asking a question, count calmly to ten before you say anything.

You speak last
That stops the team from simply adopting your idea.

Small is good
An agreement that can start tomorrow beats a plan for next year.

Based on: Bakker and Demerouti (2017), the Job Demands-Resources model; Nielsen and Randall (2013) on participatory interventions

Worksheet 02 · To fill in

Running a one-hour team session

Name _____ Date _____

Questions and example agreements per friction point

Friction point	Question for the team	How an agreement might sound
Overseeing AI output	Which output always needs two pairs of eyes, and which doesn't?	Client texts and figures get checked by two people; internal summaries by spot check.
Too many tools at once	Which tools do we drop, and which do we keep?	We use three AI tools at most. One person tests a new tool for two weeks first.
Work after hours	When does AI work stop, and how do we stick to it?	After 6 pm we don't start AI tasks or send messages about AI work.
Too little training	What do you still want to learn, and from whom?	At every team meeting, one person shares a useful way of working in ten minutes.
Worries about AI	What do we want to keep doing ourselves, even if AI could do it?	Client conversations and final editing stay human work.

Session notes: who attended, the chosen friction point and the key examples

Your agreements, who looks after them, and the date of the review

For use within your own organisation. Do not resell or share publicly.

Worksheet 03

Team agreements template for AI work

Fill in this template together with the team at the end of the team session. Keep the agreements short and concrete so everyone can remember them. Then put it on the wall or in the team channel.

Time	When	What you get
15 minutes at the end of the team session	After the team session, and updated at every review	Agreements everyone can find and keep

Why it works

Clear agreements about who checks what avoid two pitfalls at once: everyone double-checking everything, and nobody really looking anymore because the tool is usually right.

Agreements about tools and working hours also lower the demands AI work places on people.

The test of a good agreement

Concrete
Everyone knows exactly what it means.

Doable
It can start next week.

Visible
You notice when it isn't happening.

Owned by the team
The team came up with it itself.

The six topics

- Which AI tools we use
- What we do and don't use AI for
- Who checks which output
- When AI work stops
- Where we share questions and mistakes
- When we review

Example: Communications team

Topic	What we agree	Who looks after it
Which AI tools we use	Copilot and ChatGPT Enterprise. No other tools with client data.	Mark
What we do and don't use AI for	Yes for first drafts and summaries. No for assessing people.	Team
Who checks which output	Client texts: the writer plus a colleague. Figures: always Ilse.	Ilse
When AI work stops	At 6 pm. No AI tasks at weekends.	Everyone
Where we share questions and mistakes	The #ai-work channel, and ten minutes in the weekly meeting.	Youssef
When we review	In six weeks, on Tuesday 17 November.	Manager

Based on: Bakker and Demerouti (2017); Parasuraman and Manzey (2010) on automation bias

Worksheet 03 · To fill in

Team agreements template for AI work

Name _____ Date _____

Topic	What we agree	Who looks after it
Which AI tools we use
What we do and don't use AI for
Who checks which output
When AI work stops
Where we share questions and mistakes
When we review

A template with the six topics, what you agree and who looks after it

The date of the next review

Team sign-off, with names or initials

For use within your own organisation. Do not resell or share publicly.

Worksheet 04

Six-week review form

Agreements only work if you look back at them together after a while. Take fifteen minutes in a team meeting to decide for each agreement: keep, adjust or stop.

Time	When	What you get
15 minutes in a team meeting	Six weeks after the team session	A decision for every agreement, and a team that sees it working

Why it works

Plan, do, check, adjust: that's the cycle that reduces work pressure for good, and it's also at the heart of the Dutch risk inventory and evaluation (RI&E).

Short, regular reviews keep agreements alive and show what they deliver. Take the team scan again after three months to see whether anything has changed.

How to go about it

1	Read each agreement aloud Use the team agreements template from the team session.
2	Thumbs up, sideways or down Everyone shows at the same time whether the agreement is working well, partly or not at all.
3	Discuss the differences Only talk it through where opinions differ. Ask for examples.
4	Decide For each agreement: keep, adjust or stop. Write it down straight away.

Example

Agreement	Working	Decision	What we change
Two people check client texts	Well	Keep
No AI tasks after 6 pm	Partly	Adjust	No messages in the team channel after 6 pm either.
Share a way of working at every meeting	No	Stop	Once a month is enough.

Based on: The plan, do, check and adjust cycle from the RI&E approach and its action plan

Worksheet 04 · To fill in

Six-week review form

Name _____ Date _____

Agreement	Working	Decision	What we change

For each agreement: well, partly or not, and the decision

How heavy AI work feels, at the team session and now

What has become lighter, what still pinches, and the date of the next review

For use within your own organisation. Do not resell or share publicly.